General Sherman's boll, rapid, and extenive incursion into the South startled and alarmed the whole Southern Confederacy and excited the highest hopes and expectations throughout all the loyal States. We have by no meane abandoned hope yet, but the remarke we cited yesterday from a Richmond paper about the withdrawal of Sherman's rces, and now the intelligence of the existnce of grave apprehensions at Washington as to his ability to maintain a position in the cutb, are far from encouraging. If the success of Sherman's Etupendous expedition de pended upon his having the support of Smith'e and Grierion's cavalry, what folly or madness it was to despatch that cavalry to his aid from such distant points as Memphis and Corinth without making sure that is prepared to move rapidly enough to avoid the possibility of repulse by rebel concentration or any other cause or combination ver, for six days. of causes. Why could not Smith and Grierson have accompanied Sherman?

When Sherman penetrated the South, h no backward step.
